Environmental Stories:

Kansas City Star - Diesel fumes near Kansas City, Kan., rail yard pose health threat, report says - 7/15/14 - For generations, the Argentine railyard has been the lifeblood of this economically challenged Kansas City, Kan., neighborhood, providing jobs and attracting industry. The trains rolling by make a constant, even reassuring sound. But DeCaigny knows neighbors who regularly smell the diesel exhaust from the locomotives and the trucks that pick up and drop off cargo.

WNAX Radio, Yankton, S.D. - EPA Funding Cut a Warning - 7/15/14 - - Last week, a House Sub Committee approved legislation cutting EPA's funding by nine percent. The Chairman noted there's a great deal of concern over the number of regulatory actions taken by EPA in the absence of any legislation and without clear Congressional direction. <http://wnax.com/news/180081-epa-funding-cut-a-warning>

Bloomberg - EPA Mercury Rule Impact on Coal Bigger Than Carbon: Norris - 7/14/14 - The EPA's proposed greenhouse gas emission limits for existing power plants "won't be as impactful" on coal-fired generators as the agency's mercury emissions limits, FERC commissioner John Norris says. <http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2014-07-14/epa-mercury-rule-impact-on-coal-bigger-than-carbon-norris.html>

Associated Press - Officials monitor fertilizer spill in Allison - 7/14/14 - Officials are monitoring cleanup of a fertilizer spill in northern Iowa that dumped hundreds of gallons of liquid. The state Department of Natural Resources said Monday that an employee of the Farmers Cooperative in Allison was pulling a tank of 32 percent liquid nitrogen fertilizer on Thursday when a seam on the tank failed.
